Using the brand toolkit

We use the brand toolkit in different ways across our activities.

Branded experiences

What we do:

- use the primary palette
- try to use a touch of red where possible

Branded activities

What we do:

- use additional colours that 'draw' from the artworks when needed
- try to include a touch of red where possible

Exhibitions

What we do:

- colour choice is open
- use guest typefaces if needed

Example ad for National Portrait Gallery

A touch of red is included

The background colour is drawn from the artwork

Typography interacts, overlays and creates a powerful link to the image

The headline tone is warm and human

The body copy is concise and the CTA clear

The artwork is cropped to create a strong point of focus

Clear space

To calculate the amount of clear space around the logo, use the height of our frame symbol.

The minimum space is only a guide, always give the logo room to breathe.

Minimum sizes

The minimum size specifications are a guide only. Always make sure our logo is clear and legible.

Print - 12mm width

Digital - 20px standard screen - 40px retina screen

Colour variations

The frame symbol can appear in any colour. When choosing a colour it should be clearly legible.

Although a different colour frame is used in the above right examples, it hasn't affected the legibility of the logo type.

On the examples shown bottom right the colour of the frame is either too light or dark so that word 'PORTRAIT' isn't clear.

Successful colour combinations

Primary palette

Our primary colour palette consists of nine colours (including black and white).

The colour palette can be supplemented/replaced with other colours when appearing with an artwork.

Neutrals work well when multiple artworks are shown together. This helps avoid colour 'clashes'.

Collection colours

We can use colours 'drawn' from an artwork and use them as a background or for highlight copy.

Use of the NPG Red

Where possible NPG Red should be used through our branded activities and experiences. It's most successful when used in small 'touches'.

Typography

Sharp Sans is our primary typeface. As a general guide headlines should be Sharp Sans Bold uppercase.

In digital applications Inter should be used to support Sharp Sans. Inter works well at small sizes and for text.

Calibri should be used for Microsoft applications such as Word or PowerPoint.

Word

In Office 365, there are NPG branded templates to use, which are crucial for maintaining consistency and professionalism in internal documents.

The Word templates have been created using styles. Styles are a set of formatting options that you apply to text. They help you to quickly and easily format your document.

When opening Word, choose 'File > open from template > open XXX'

To use the styles within the document:

- select the text you want to format
- click the 'styles pane' (Home tab > styles pane), select 'list: Styles in use'
- click the style you want to apply.
